Greg Weiner's research and teaching stand at the intersection of political theory and the Constitution. An assistant professor of political science at Assumption College, he is the author of Madison's Metronome: The Constitution, Majority Rule and the Tempo of American Politics, published by the prestigious American Political Thought series of the University Press of Kansas, as well as the forthcoming American Burke: The Uncommon Liberalism of Daniel Patrick Moynihan. Weiner's research and teaching interests include the political theory of the Constitution, the political thought of James Madison, civil liberties and the role of the Supreme Court. Weiner received his Ph.D. in political theory from Georgetown University, where he was awarded the prestigious Glassman Prize for the best dissertation in the social sciences, and was a Postdoctoral Research Associate at the Political Theory Project at Brown University. Winner of the nationally awarded Jack Miller Center's Chairman's Prize for the best dissertation in American Political Thought, he has taught at Brown University, Georgetown University and Johns Hopkins University. Weiner’s research and teaching are informed by the several years he spent as a high-level aide and consultant in national politics, including several years as Communications and Policy Director to U.S. Senator Bob Kerrey of Nebraska and as founder of the Washington, D.C.-based speechwriting firm Content Communications, LLC. Weiner, who grew up in Central Texas, lives in Holden, Massachusetts, with his wife and their three children.
